

BEAUTIES ... Miss SA Tatum Keshwar (left) meets Miss PE Nono Gali. Picture: MIKE HOLMES

Miss SA flies in to help pick a winner

Eleanor Douglas-Meyers
LA FEMME REPORTER

douglase@avusa.co.za

MISS South Africa 2008 Tatum Keshwar has arrived in Port Elizabeth, ready to help pick out the winner of this year's The Herald Greenacres Miss Port Elizabeth competition.

She will be helping The Herald managing editor Sicele Fayo, former Evening Post Spring Queen and business-woman Lauren Rushmere, Salome Abrahams of Greenacres

Shopping Centre and current Miss Port Elizabeth Nono Gali in choosing Nelson Mandela Bay's new ambassador at the Feather Market Centre from 7pm tonight.

Keshwar says she knows exactly what she will be looking for in a winner. "I'm looking for someone truly passionate about being Miss PE, someone who is beautiful inside and out."

Winning the Miss SA title was not the first taste of the limelight for the 24-year-old beauty who started modelling classes because her mother hoped it would cure her of her shyness. The lessons paid off. Prior to winning Miss SA she was a finalist in the third season of the Revlon Supermodel competition, and was model of the year in 2005.

There is still time to get your tickets for the gala event tonight through Computicket at R85 each. No tickets will be available at the door.

☐ See our ticket winners on Page 2

